

Blue Shark Trips (Oregon and Washington)

(July-September) Besides Salmon and Bottomfish, some locations also provide the opportunity to tangle with a monster Blue Shark while fly fishing. Try something new this summer. Blue Sharks like warmer water, so boats will find water that is warmer than 58 degrees (the warmer the better).

The engine will be shut down, the chum dropped overboard to create a slick, and the waiting begins. It is usually a short wait until you see the dorsal fins moving through the water coming towards the back of the boat (hum the Jaws theme song if you like). You are ready with a 12 wt. fly rod and wire leader. You make a cast ahead of the massive shark. Strip...Strip...Strip, you see the shark turn and follow your fly. You keep stripping.... you see your fly disappear in the shark's mouth, but you keep stripping until you feel weight. Ahh... There He Is! The shark takes off and you in for a reel battle hooking a shark on a fly rod.

Sounds like fun, doesn't it? Due to reductions in Ocean Salmon seasons, there will be more open days for blue shark fishing during the summer. Ocean fishing will be closed for salmon fishing Sundays and Mondays, which means Sundays and Mondays are shark days (seasons can vary). Contact us for more details of this exciting new fishery on Washington's Northern Coast.

All Blue Shark trips are catch and release only.
